

AT HOLLY FARM

By VICTOR REDCLIFFE.

(Copyright, 1914, by W. G. Chapman.)

"It won't do, Reuben. Father says you need taming down, and he's going to get you a position in a town store and see if he can't repress some of your surplus animal spirit, as he calls it."

"That so?" retorted stalwart, independent Reuben Marsh. "Well, it won't work."

"Then you'll be in the back of his books when it comes to dividing up the property."

"Who cares for his property?" burst out Reuben. "It's him I care for. He's a jolly good father, only I'm too rough and ready to suit him. That isn't my fault; I was born so."

For once in his life old Geoffrey Marsh was sharp and severe with Reuben when he called him to a secret interview in the library.

"I've blocked out your course," he said. "I expect you to follow it."

And Reuben was resolute, and to his father's way of thinking almost insolent as he replied sturdily:

"It can't be done, dad. One week shut up in a store would kill me. Let me go to road-making or caring for the horses, but don't shut me away from nature."

"You've heard me!" pronounced his determined sire definitely. "I'm trying to make something of you besides a stable boy. It's obedience or—"

"The open road?" smiled Reuben inquisitively. "All right. You've been a good father, but I'm not of the silky, high-toned class of Ray and Bertram. I'll go it on my own hook, I reckon."

"He'll be back in a week," predicted Mr. Marsh to his mourning wife after Reuben had gone.

"I fear not," quavered the anxious mother. "Reuben is too proud to weaken on his own course. He'll thrive, for he is all go-aheadativeness, but we shall miss him dreadfully."

Reuben was thinking of his mother at just that moment. He had swung away down the road, a stout stick over his shoulder bearing a bundle on its end.

Early the following morning Reuben saw at a distance a scattered group of farm buildings.

"I'm tired of tramping," he soliloquized. "If there's a place for me yonder I'll just camp down for a spell."

He came to the farm, a big one, an hour later. It was to see three men, two women and some children grouped together about a pit. There was discussion and commotion. All were excited except a girl who stood interestedly watching what was going on. Reuben thought she was the fairest creature he had ever met.

"Hello—a stranger!" suddenly ejaculated the old man of the group, observing Reuben.

"Yes," nodded the latter in a pleasant, off-handed way. "What's going on here, may I ask?"

"Just take a look and see," was the reply, and Reuben pressed close to the pit, a deep, boarded-up affair.

"Aha! he spoke out readily—wolves, four of them!"

"As you see," nodded the old farmer. "The pests have got so thick we set traps for 'em. Expected to catch an occasional one, and here's four in a bunch."

The animals were big and fierce. They leaped about wildly in their savage rage, but could not scale the sides of the smooth boarded pit.

"And you want to get rid of them?" queried Reuben tightly.

"Got to—some way,"

Reuben glanced about him till he located a heavy wagon spoke near by. He threw off his coat and grasped the formidable cudgel firmly.

"Stand aside," he ordered brusquely. The old farmer looked shocked.

His pretty daughter, Amy, caught her breath with a quick thrill. Down into the pit landed Reuben.

Swish—thud!—once, twice, thrice, four times. His brawny arm swung like a flail. With cracked skulls the savage beasts lay panting out their last breath.

"Lower a rope and haul them up in town," ordered Reuben.

A hand of iron, that of the old farmer, clamped his shoulder as he in turn was drawn to the surface.

"You'll do!" he cried admiringly, and then as Reuben viewed the grateful faces of those about him and felt the sparkling commendatory glance of the fair young girl, he realized that he had at last found an environment where his strength and courage were appreciated.

"If you should be looking for a job now—" ventured the old farmer longingly, and just then Reuben met again the witching eyes of Amy.

"I am," he answered promptly.

That was the beginning of an ideal life for the wayfarer, who had found his mission and right environment at last.

One year to a day after his leaving the old home, Reuben returned to visit his old father and mother, his bride upon his arm.

"Married, happy and settled, father," he said cheerily, and Mr. Marsh could not gainsay him, and kissed his blushing daughter-in-law tenderly. "If you had made me a lawyer as you planned, I would probably have whipped all my rivals in court. A dentist, I'd have broken my patient's jaw first time. A merchant, I'd have plied away. Simple, natural Reuben, only a farmer, but the happiest one in all the wide world!"

His Desire.

The business manager of an amateur attraction in a Kansas town made modest demands on the manager of the opera house. "What kind of a setting will you want?" the theater manager asked. "Well," replied the other, "we'd like to have seats for everybody that comes."

He Knew That Story.

The old soldier was again giving the youngsters accounts of the wonders he had experienced, especially in the way of climate. Said he: "I remember when we were in Fyzardum we used to toast our bread in the sun, and—" Youngster (interrupting): "Yes, I know; and you were supplied with corkscrews to draw your breath!"

MERELY REPETITION.

History repeats itself with almost exactness similarity, except in many instances modern methods and modern conditions vary greatly. The New York Globe says editorially that the present coalition against Germany of the Hohenzollerns becomes more and more like the coalition of one hundred years ago against Napoleon's France. There is the same unity of action among dissimilar nations—the same armed protest against the menace to the principle of nationality—the same coming together of divergent peoples to battle against the dominance of one power thought to be possessed of an imperialistic ambition.

In its early years revolutionary France was opposed by the dynasties and aristocratic elements of Europe whose continued existence was threatened. The first coalition was against France, which was surrounded by a ring of enemies. But France, although butting single-handed, was able to triumph. Her triumph was due to the fact that she stood for democratic principles and was deemed friendly to national rights. The peoples of Germany, of Italy, the Netherlands, and even of Spain and Austria, were friendly to French ideas—they were disposed to welcome the French armies, not as conquerors, but as liberators. Then Napoleon in his later years caught the disease of his enemies. Swollen with pride, he began to play the role of Louis XIV. He tore down republics and created in their stead kingdoms over which he placed members of his family or his marshals. He affronted profound nationalistic instincts. Slowly popular feeling changed. Cities that had met the French soldiers with garlands became hostile. It was found that the French as conquerors were as objectionable as other conquerors. Spain rose and Prussia rose, which a few years before had given weak support to their kings. In 1811 Napoleon, except for Great Britain, could look out on a world apparently obedient to his will. Three years later he was an exile. He had challenged nationalism and seemingly was desirous of establishing a new Rome, and nationalism destroyed him.

Is it the misfortune of the governing classes of Germany to have aroused the feeling throughout Europe that the policy of the Kaiser's Germany in imperial not merely to the other great powers, but to the lesser powers, Holland, Sweden, Norway, Denmark, Rumania, Greece, Portugal, Serbia, Montenegro, and even Switzerland and Italy do not deem themselves safe if militant Teutonism triumphs. The German professors have preached too openly the doctrine that German Kultur is superior and that as such it has a right to rule.

Italy has nominally broken with Austria because of a dispute over territory. But to get an adequate explanation one must look beneath the surface. Likewise, if Rumania comes into the war it will not be altogether because of the desire to possess Transylvania, although this desire exists. Nationalism is a great power in the world. It not only overthrew Napoleon, but in later years it has unified Germany and Italy, and was behind any nation that challenges it. There are signs of increasing internationalism, but it is also one of intense nationalism.

PREMATURE DEMOCRATIC GLEE.

Just now there is much gleeful chirp and chatter from the leading members of the administration regarding the more hopeful condition of business. To a certain extent the outlook is better, but the country should labor under no misapprehension as to the cause. The war in Europe has built up about the United States a protective wall, and is giving the tariff protection that the democrats took away in their tariff bill. The Wilson-Underwood law opened wide our doors to foreign products; the European conflict prevents the foreign producer from taking advantage of the opportunity thus given. That is the real reason for the present business upturn, plus the war orders which this country is receiving.

The proper comparison of present business conditions is not with the conditions which existed before the democrats came into power. For this purpose, the two years of 1912 and 1914 afford an excellent barometer, as they are the last years of the republican management of the nation and the first full year of democratic control. Business failures in 1912 were 14,000 in number, with total liabilities of less than $200,000,000; failures in 1914, 17,000, with liabilities of nearly $400,000,000. The year 1914 was one of the most disappointing ever experienced by promoters of new enterprises. Incorporations of new business fell off nearly one-half from the figures of 1912, and the issue of new securities decreased in like ratio.

Figures received from a variety of industries throughout the country indicate that about three million employees in the manufacturing and mechanical industries of the United States were out of work in 1914, who were engaged in profitable employment on July 1, 1912. If this same percentage were applied to other employments outside of agriculture, the number of unemployed, agriculture excluded, would amount to over six million, as compared with the figures of 1912.

The railroad receipts and prosperity always mirror well the business activity of the country. Railway construction in 1914 was the smallest in more than twenty years, with the single exception of 1895, and was only one-half of that of 1912. During 1914, twenty-two railroads went into the hands of receivers, as against thirteen in 1912. In 1914, railroads were sold under foreclosure with a mileage of 1,500 miles and bonds and stocks amounting to $83,000,000. In 1912, the railroads sold under foreclosure represented 700 miles and $26,000,000 in bonds and stocks.

In the light of such facts and figures, the members of the Wilson administration would do well to refrain from making claim to any credit for the present outlook.

WHAT NEXT?

Outward bound for home, sailing in ballast, with the American flag flying and the fact proclaimed in large painted letters it was a vessel of United States registry, the Nebraska was either struck by a floating mine or a submarine torpedo off the coast of Ireland so severely damaged that it was forced to return to Liverpool for repairs. It was either intentionally attacked or an accident. Either way it will be hard to explain to the American public following as it does on the heels of the sinking of the Lusitania. The Chicago Herald sums up the attitude of the American people over this latest outrage when it says that if intentional, it shows that submarine warfare against merchant vessels is being conducted with a disregard for the lives and property of neutrals and demanded its abandonment.

"It is too plain for argument that a method of naval warfare which is so uncertain in its information and operation as to put a neutral merchant ship, outward bound for a home port in ballast, in peril of instant destruction with the loss of those on board has no legitimate place in modern warfare."

"Florida can take either horn of the dilemma it chooses. It can approve the act as justified or it can apologize for it as unintentional and make reparation."

"In either case the fact will remain that the affair furnishes a striking and timely proof of the correctness of the president's position in the Lusitania note."

"This country already supports the president unflinchingly. When a German submarine crew does the same the argument would seem to be ended."

The conservative members of the legislature have their fighting outfit on and are ready to force an issue in the case of the people versus the ultra progressives when it comes to passing unnecessary appropriations. With an almost empty state treasury it is time to fight against expenditures that mean more taxes.

There is one thing this wet spring has accomplished and that is the raising of a first-class crop of mosquitoes. They will appear the first warm evening and make their presence known. Flies will also appear and we may expect a merry "swatting" time when the actual warfare begins.

With June looming up in sight, the month of roses and weddings, warm days and vacation period, May appears to have been the discard of a late spring with very little to be said for its credit on the book of old Dame Nature.

An exchange suggests that Bulgaria should stick to its buttermilk.

TERRITORIALS AS KEEN AS MUSTARD

British Generals Speak in High Praise of Kitchener's New Soldiers.

ASK FOR NO BETTER TROOPS

Men Are Wonderfully Intelligent and Acquire Remarkable Skill in Trench Warfare—Hot Bath Every Ten Days for Every British Soldier.

By E. ASHMEAD BARTLETT, International News Service Correspondent, British General Headquarters, France.—At the outbreak of the war almost everyone in England had complete confidence in the British small regular army, and felt certain that it would give a splendid account of itself on the continent. On the other hand there was widespread mistrust of the capabilities of the new territorial army, either for purposes of home defense, or for service abroad. I will give my own impression from what I saw during my visit to the front, and also the opinions of various generals—without mentioning names, which is forbidden by the censor—under whom they have served.

The vast majority of the men who fill the ranks of the territorial forces are drawn from a different class to those who enlist in the regular army. There are clerks from the London financial district holding good positions. There are men who come from behind the counter, and others who fill positions of a highly important and confidential character, such as secretaries, accountants and mechanical experts. Every branch of trade and industry is represented in the ranks. They are men who have joined the force out of a sense of duty, because they feel that every able-bodied man should play some role, however small, in the defense of his country.

Many have been obliged to throw up employment which was bringing them in large salaries, and now support their homes and families on the king's shilling and separation allowances. Some of the battalions sent to the front had to meet their baptism of fire under the most trying circumstances.

French Is Delighted. But Sir John French himself is delighted with them. A corps commander said to me: "I consider the territorial battalions under my command the equal of any of the line battalions. Let them send me out as many as they can. I can ask for no better troops after they had a few weeks of experience in the face of the enemy."

A brigade commander spoke as follows: "My territorials are a wonderful lot. I never saw finer troops. The men are wonderfully intelligent. They are as keen as mustard, and are acquiring a remarkable skill in trench warfare."

Take the case of a crack corps, like the "Artists' Rifles." Our losses in officers has been so heavy that Sir John French decided on the novel experiment of keeping the whole of this famous battalion behind the line, and training all ranks as officers. As they reached a certain standard of progress they were given commissions and drafted to regular battalions. I made careful inquiries as to how this experiment had worked out in practice. One corps commander told me he had received a large number of these new officers from the Artists' Rifles, and that with extremely few exceptions they had turned out admirably.

A love of cleanliness is one of the strongest traits in the Anglo-Saxon race. The best of troops speedily lose their pride and self-respect if they are obliged to live in filthy surroundings, amidst which it is impossible for them to clean themselves, their uniforms and equipment. The conditions in Flanders throughout the winter have been about as bad as any troops have ever had to face. The army medical corps took the problem in hand and has shown remarkable skill and ingenuity in its solution.

Bath Every Ten Days. Scattered over northern France and Flanders are many factories for making beet sugar and beer. These possess enormous vats such as most of us are familiar with in breweries at home. As their legitimate occupation, in the case of those situated close to the firing line, is now gone, they have been utilized for the purpose of washing the British army.

This experiment of cleaning every man in an army several hundreds of thousands strong once in every ten days has never been tried before in war. Yet so complete is the organization that, except under exceptional circumstances, every man and officer is sure of his hot bath every ten days. A battalion comes off duty and marches to rest in its billets, the men and their uniforms covered with mud. Above all, it is necessary to change their shirts and underclothes.

Let it not be supposed that the only enemy our men have to face is found in the trenches. There is another, who carries on a horrible nerve-racking form of guerrilla warfare in closer proximity to you after a few days spent in the mud.

His pertinacity and vitality is amazing. He requires ten times as much killing as any German, but our medical service has proved equal to the task of circumventing his wiles. The battalion is paraded and marched to the nearest bath. Often this is under shell fire, and the shrapnel is screaming overhead. But no one heeds such trifles as these. Each man strips and throws his shirt, underclothes, and socks into a heap. His uniform he takes off, and ties to it his tin identification disk. At a word of command groups of fourteen nude forms with a wild howl of joy rush into each of the steaming tubs. From these arise a chorus of screams and chaff as the men soap or duck each other in soap suds.

Clothes. Steamed and Washed. Meanwhile the uniforms are placed in another vat, and steamed for ten minutes. The heat is so great that no evaporation takes place, and they come out perfectly dry. Each man as he emerges from the bath after his allotted span is handed a towel and a fresh set of underclothes.

He then dries himself, puts his new garments on, and claims his uniform, recognizing it by the identification disk. The underclothes, which he took off are then boiled or steamed in great vats, and then handed over to the washerwomen who are employed for this purpose at four francs (80 cents) a day. They are then carefully inspected and if found perfectly clean are made up into sets, and are available for the next battalion which comes to be washed.

I was present when a territorial battalion was having its turn. A young printer's clerk said to me: "This is the day we all live for. It helps you to get back your self-respect just when you feel you are sinking to the level of brute beasts from mud and dirt. I don't believe one of us would surrender his turn for a day."

The Retort Discourteous. In Detroit we were seated in the Pontchartrain recently listening to two old cronies who had apparently been sitting in the bar all of the afternoon and were pretty much the worse for their long visit, when one of them said:

"By the way, what is your nationality, Jim?" "Oh, I'm half Scotch." "Then," said the friend, "I suppose the other half is seltzer."

An Ode. Oh, dear to our hearts are the sad days of springtime, when the annual house cleaning recurs to our view when we sleep on the sofa and eat off the mantel, in an atmosphere strongly suggestive of glue; we think of the stove-pipe, the soot that come with it and the sweet expressions so fluent and fine, but the saddest and most bitter of all recollections is the dusty old carpet that hung on the line.

DOINGS OF THE VAN LOONS—Cheer Up Father! Perhaps It Isn't as Bad as all That

A FOOL AND HIS MONEY

By
GEORGE BARR
M'CUTCHEON,
Author of "Graustark,"
"Truxton King," Etc.

Copyright, 1915, by George Barr McCutcheon.

She smiled too merrily I thought. "You must not tell any one else about it however."

"I can promise that," I said, a sudden rage in my soul. "Doris could not drag it out of me. Rest easy."

It occurred to me afterward that she laughed rather jerkily, you might say. At any rate, she turned away and began speaking to Max.

"Have you had your breakfast?" I asked stupidly.

"No."

"Neither have I. Will you join me?"

"Isn't it getting to be a habit?"

"Breakfast or—?"

"Breakfast and me."

"I confess, my dear countess, that I like you for breakfast," I said gallantly.

"That is a real tribute," she said demurely and took her place beside me. Together we crossed the courtyard.

On the steps Collingcraft Titus was waiting. I uttered an audible groan and winced as I felt the pain.

"What is it?" she cried quickly.

"Rheumatism," I announced, carefully raising my right arm and affecting an expression of torture. I am not a physical coward, kind reader. The fact that young Mr. Titus carried in his hands a set of formidable looking boxing gloves did not frighten me. Heaven knows, if it would give him any pleasure to slam me about with a pair of gloves I am not without manliness and pluck enough to endure physical pain and mental humiliation. It was diplomacy, cunning, astuteness—whatever you may choose to call it—that stood between me and a friendly encounter with him. Two minutes' time would serve to convince him that he was my master, and then where would I be? Where would be the prestige I had gained? Where my record as a conqueror? "I must have caught cold in my arms and shoulders," I went on, making worse faces than before as I moved the afflicted parts experimentally.

"There," she exclaimed ruefully; "I knew you would catch cold! Men always do. I'm so sorry."

"It's nothing," I made haste to explain—"that is, nothing serious. I'll get rid of it in no time at all." I calculated for a minute. "A week or ten days at the most. Good morning, Collingcraft."

"Morning. Hello, sis. Well?" He dangled the gloves before my eyes.

My disappointment was quite pathetic. "Tell him," I said to the countess.

"He's all crippled up with rheumatism, Colly," she said. "Put those ugly things away. We're going in to breakfast."

He tossed the gloves into a corner of the vestibule. I felt a little ashamed of my subterfuge in the face of his earnest expression of concern.

"Tell you what I'll do," he said warmly. "I know how to rub a fellow's muscles."

"Oh, I have a treasure in Britton!" I said hastily. "Thanks, old man. He will work it out of me. Sorry we can't have a go this morning."

The worst of it all was that he insisted, as a matter of personal education, on coming to my room after breakfast to watch the expert maneuvers of Britton in kneading the stiffness out of my muscles. He was looking for new ideas, he explained. I first consulted Britton and then readily consented to the demonstration.

To my surprise, Britton was something of an expert. I confess that he almost killed me with those strong, ironlike hands of his. If I was not sore when he began with me I certainly was when he finished. Collingcraft was most enthusiastic. He said he'd never seen any one manipulate the muscles so scientifically as Britton and ventured the opinion that he would not have to repeat the operation often. To myself I said that he wouldn't be so quick to efface himself than any human being I've ever seen. These letters informed us that a yacht, one of three now cruising in the Mediterranean, would call at an appointed port on such and such a day to take her out to sea. Everything was being arranged on the outside for her escape from the continent, and precision seemed to be the watchword.

Of course I couldn't do a stroke of work on my novel. How could I be expected to devote myself to fiction when fact was staring me in the face so engagingly? We led an idle, dolce far niente life in these days, with an underlying touch of anxiety and excitement that increased as the day for her departure drew near. I confess to a sickening sense of depression that could not be shaken off.

Half of my time was spent in playing with Rosemary. She became dearer to me with each succeeding day. I knew I should miss her tremendously. I should even miss Jinks, who didn't like me, but who no longer grieved at me. The castle would be a very gloomy, dreary place after they were out of it. I found myself wondering how long I would be able to endure the loneliness. Secretly I cherished the idea of selling the place if I could find a human in the market. I didn't suppose there was anybody in the whole world crazy enough to buy it.

An unexpected diversion came one day when, without warning and figuratively out of a clear sky, the Hazards and the Billy Smiths swooped down upon me. They had come up the river in the power boat for a final September run and planned to stop overnight with me.

They were the last people in the world whom I could turn away from my door. There might have been a chance to put them up for the night and still avoid disclosures had not circumstance ordered that the countess and I should be working in the garden at the very moment that brought them pounding at the postern gates. Old Conrad opened the gate in complete ignorance of our presence in the garden. (We happened to be in a somewhat obscure nook and seated upon a stone bench, so he must be held blameless.) The quarter brushed past the old man, and I, hearing his chatter, foolishly exposed myself.

I shall not attempt to describe the scene that followed their discovery of the Countess Tarnowsky. Be it said, however, to the credit of Elsie and Betty Billy the startled refugees were fairly smothered in kisses and tears and almost defended by the shrill, delighted exclamations that fell from their eager lips. I doubt if there ever was such a sensation before.

They brought rather interesting news concerning the count. It appears that he and the baron had quarreled, and at the time of my friends' departure from Vienna it was pretty generally understood that there would be a duel.

"I never liked the baron," I said, with a grim smile that could not have been misinterpreted. "But I hope to heavens he isn't killed."

Mrs. Titus sighed. "Tarnowsky is regarded as a wonderful marksman."

"Worse luck!" growled Collingcraft, gloomily twiddling his thumbs.

"What kind of a shot is the baron?" asked Jasper junior hopefully.

No one was able to enlighten him, but Billy Smith shook his head dolefully.

"Maris Tarnowsky is a good shot,"

He'll pot the baron sure."

"Hang it all," said I, and then lapsed into a horrified silence.

When the Hazards and Smiths departed the next morning they were in full possession of all of our plans, hopes and secrets, but they were bound by promises that would have haunted them throughout all eternity if they allowed them to be violated. I do not recall having seen two more intensely excited, radiant women in my life than Elsie and Betty Billy. They were in an ecstatic state of mind. Their husbands, but little less excited, offered to help us in every way possible, and to prove their earnest, turned the prow of the motorboat down stream, abandoning the trip up the river in order to be in Vienna in case I should need them for any purpose whatsoever.

"You may rest easy so far as I am concerned," Mrs. Titus said the young diplomat. "As a representative of the United States government I can't become publicly involved in this international muddle. I've just got to keep my lips sealed. If it were discovered that I knew of all this, my head would be under the sickle-saw in no time at all. Swish! Officially suicided!"

At 10 o'clock the next morning I was called to the telephone. Smith had startling news to impart. Count Tarnowsky and Baron Umoritch had engaged in a duel with pistols at sunrise and the latter had gone down with a bullet through his lungs! He died an hour later. Tarnowsky, according to the rumors flying about official Vienna, was already on his way to Berlin, where he would probably remain in seclusion until the affair blew over or imperial forgiveness was extended to him.

There was cause for satisfaction among us, even though the baron had fallen instead of the count. The sensational affair would serve to keep Tarnowsky under cover for some weeks at least and minimize the dangers attending the countess' flight from the castle. Still, I could not help feeling disappointed over the outcome of the meeting. Why couldn't Count Tarnowsky have been the one to fall?

The countess, very pale and distraught, gave utterance to her feelings in a most remarkable speech. She said: "This is one of the few fine things that Maris has ever done. I am glad that he killed that man. He should have done so long ago, the beast! He was—ugh!—the most despicable creature I've ever known."

She said no more than this, but one could readily grasp all that she left unuttered.

Collingcraft rather sentimentally remarked to little Rosemary, who could not have comprehended the words of course, "Well, little Rosebud, your papa may be a spendthrift, but he never wastes bullets."

Which was entirely unbecoming for, I confess, I was struck by the swift look of dread that leaped into Alina's eyes and her pallor.

On top of all this came the astonishing news by cipher dispatch from old Jasper Titus' principal adviser in London that his offer of $1,000,000 had been declined by Tarnowsky two days before, the count having replied through his lawyers that nothing short of two millions would induce him to relinquish all claims to his child.

I had been ignorant of this move in the case and expressed my surprise.

"I asked father to do it, Mr. Smart," said the countess dejectedly. "It seemed the easiest way out of our difficulties—and the cheapest. He will never give in to this new demand though. We must make the best of it."

"But why did you suggest such a thing to him?" I demanded with heat.

She looked hurt. "Because you seemed to think it was the right and honorable thing to do," she said patiently. "I do not forget what you said to me days and days ago even though it may have slipped your mind. You said that a bargain is a bargain—and well, I had Mr. Bangs write father just what you thought about it."

There was a suspicion of tears in her voice as she turned away and left me without another word. She was quite out of sight around the bend in the staircase and her little boots were clattering swiftly upward before I fully grasped the significance of her explanation—or, I might better say, her reproach. It slowly dawned upon me that I had said a great many things to her that it would pay me to remember before questioning her motives in any particular.

As the day for her departure drew nearer—it was now but forty-eight hours away—her manner seemed to undergo a complete change. She became moody, nervous, depressed. Of course all this was attributable to the dread of discovery and capture when she was once outside the great walls of Schloss Rothoefen. I could understand her feelings and rather lamely attempted to bolster up her courage by making light of the supposed perils.

She looked at me with a certain na-thetick sobriety in her eyes that caused my heart to ache. All of her joyous rattery was gone, all of her gentle arrogance. Her sole interest in life in these last days seemed to be of a sacrificial nature. She was sweet and gentle with every one—with me in particular. I may say—and there was something positively humble in her attitude of self abnegation. Where she had once been wilful and ironic she was now gentle and considerate. Nor was I the only one to note these subtle changes in her. I doubt, however, if the others were less puzzled than I. In fact, Mrs. Titus was palpably perplexed, and there were times when I caught her eyeing me with distinct disapproval, as if she were seeking in me the cause of her daughter's weakness, as much as to say, "What other nonsense have you been putting into the poor child's head, you wretch?"

I went up to have a parting romp with Rosemary on the last night of her stay with me. The countess paid but little attention to us. She sat over in the window and stared out into the dusky shadows of the falling night. My heart was sore. I was miserable. The last romp!

Blake finally snatched Rosemary off to bed. It was then that the countess aroused herself and came over to me with a sad little smile on her lips.

"Good night," she said rather wistfully, holding out her hand to me.

I deliberately glanced at my watch. "It's only ten minutes past 8," I said reproachfully.

"I know," she said quietly. "Good night."

Dinner Stories

He had been away back on the farm for many months. From that time he had heard that they were still fighting in Europe, but the apples, prunes and pigs had kept him too busy to be well posted on the news of battle. Reaching the city and seeing a crowd outside a newspaper office, gazing at the score-board, he felt sure that some very important dispatches had come through. Judging from the size of the crowd, he thought it might be the end of the war.

"But, I haven't my specs; tell me it all over," he said, addressing a tall youngster. "Not quite, but very nearly." "What is the latest?" "A tie in the eighth and one down in the ninth."

"I stole three bases today, pop," said the young hopeful proudly.

"While," interrupted his mother, before the boy's father could express his appreciation of the feat, "you go and put them right back where you got them. I'll not have it said that any boy of mine is a thief."

And she doesn't understand to this day what made the male members of the family laugh.

A friend called on a Scottish merchant who did a large continental business to offer him his sympathy. "This must hit you very hard," "Vorra hard," said the merchant. "I've over sixteen hundred pounds owing me over in Germany, and I'm no sure I'll ever see a bawbee o't." "Indeed, that is most distressing."

"Ach, aye, but no a'coosher, for I owe five thousand pounds tax that same Germans."

There is no place you can dispose of any thing as quickly and cheaply as through a classified ad. Try it and be convinced.

Beginning of Vast Commerce. Intercourse between Russia and England began in the middle of the sixteenth century by the White sea. It was a hazardous and costly voyage. The crews of two of the three ships with which Richard Chancellor made his first trip in 1553 were frozen to death. Sir Hugh Willoughby among them.

WHICH WAY ARE YOU LOOKING?

Are you looking forward—backward—of just at today?

Because Joseph S. Hartman, of Chicago, ten years ago recognized the wardrobe trunk as the "trunk of tomorrow"—and because his sons knew how to convince other people that it was the practical trunk for all purposes—they are now selling $750,000 worth of wardrobe trunks a year.

How did they do it?

They tell you on another page of this issue. You'll find the story as full of practical ideas as it is interesting.

Ten years ago they were selling $50,000 worth of the old style trunks a year. They got their idea—and advertised it. Today their annual sales are fifteen times their former size.

That is one of the suggestions.

What do YOU see when YOU look ten years ahead?

There's only one way to materialize a picture of gratifying growth: to enlist our services.

We are here to work for you. Tell us to START NOW.

Trunk Business Is Developed By Advertising

TEN YEARS AGO JOSEPH S. HARTMAN, OF CHICAGO, RECOGNIZED WARDROBE TRUNK AS "TRUNK OF TOMORROW."

Unrelenting Advertising of Right Idea Swells Annual Sales From $50,000 to $750,000 in Ten Years.

Considers 5 Per Cent. of Annual Sales Reinvested in Advertising, "Most-est Price For Enormous Benefits."

(By Andrew L. Demling.)

"Today is always mighty interesting—there's no denying that. But the thing is keeping your weather forecast for tomorrow, right while you're forecasting today, and it was that way with our Senior's weather forecast that started this establishment in the direction of its present size and prosperity."

The speaker turned with a smile to a tall, white-haired, strong featured gentleman, who smiled back at him with a twinkle that was as infectious as it was good to look at. It required no guessing of the imagination to understand how this man, Joseph S. Hartman, and his sons, have built up a wardrobe trunk business of $750,000 a year, practically in ten years.

For the personal note, before the conversation, he rose and held out his hand to me, saying, with the slight accent that has lingered with him through his almost half a century in America:

"You gentlemen will excuse me, I'm sure. I have an appointment. And besides, the people are not interested in what has been done, they want to know what you say—what is doing. And my son is the one to tell you that. And was gone."

From Bohemia to America to Carve it was at the ambitious age of twenty-one that Joseph Hartman left his home in Bohemia and came to this land of promise to carve out his future.

His first work was as a teacher of languages in New York, but he eventually joined the westward movement as far as Milwaukee, where he obtained a position as bookkeeper for a trunk concern.

His faculty for seeing ahead had already attained a pretty active state of development, and it wasn't many years before he formed a partnership with one of the salesmen and went into business for himself, continuing the younger Mr. Hartman, when we were alone.

It wasn't until 1880 that he bought out his partner and established the present business. Recognizing "Trunk of Tomorrow," "I'll tell you, we had a very comfortable business making and selling the old style trunk—we have become members of the firm. We were selling about $50,000 worth of these trunks a year, going along without much variation from year to year, either in sales or profits."

"Then father recognized the 'trunk of tomorrow,' as he called it: the wardrobe trunk."

"It was at that time struggling for recognition as a factor in trunk making and selling—but nobody was doing anything toward lifting it out of its position of imperfect and faulty state of construction."

Perfecting Wardrobe Trunks. We had been standing near the front of the big Michigan avenue retail store, where its most reflected lights and thick green glass windows revealed that we were somewhat of a cross to several polite but very busy salesmen, but he led the way to his office at the rear of the room.

"Now, when father recognizes his next move, it is the cue for him and everybody concerned to get very busy carrying it out. It wasn't long until the wardrobe trunk was made up to a feasible, actually and attractive standard. We introduced the raised top idea and proved it a success, in spite of the erroneous assumption that it weakened the trunk. Now, raising the top of a trunk just outside the office door, 'we are padding the tops, to hold the garments on the racks absolutely firm.'"

"The wardrobe trunk, with its service trunk, whose handles and racks can be removed and installed in the clothes closet. Of course, one always leads to another, and we've seen a wardrobe trunk lead from these wardrobe trunk ideas for ten years, and are still at it."

Traveling Public Discriminating Buyers. "We have to be the most field is made up for the most part of discriminating travelers. They know what features a practical trunk ought to have, and women are the greatest trunk buyers—knows she wants a trunk that holds the most clothes and returns the least space—and she knows what the old style trunks used to be like. A cost her in preparing bills. We knew we had the best trunk from these standpoints—but how to convince others?"

Advertising Boosts Annual Sales From $50,000 to $750,000. "The boys were well aware that the ideas in the world are useless as long as they are not advertised. So we took the bit in our teeth and started in."

The immediate results were as astonishing as they were gratifying. We have been big advertisers practically only ten years—and in that time our annual sales have grown from $50,000 to $750,000. That's a growth of fifteen times our former size in ten years."

Continuing, we made our slogan, 'More Clothes in Less Space.' Not a wrinkle at the end of the trip, and so forth, synonymous with wardrobe trunks the country over. Gladly Re-invests 5% of Sales in Advertising.

"How? Scarcely a day goes by without their starting at you from the advertising pages of the newspapers. In addition to the daily slogan advertising, we use big, prominently featured display space twice weekly in certain seasons, and almost as often the year round."

In short, we're mighty glad to re-invest from 5% to 5% of our annual sales in advertising, and consider the benefit cheap at the price."

"By the way," he smiled, as I turned myself into an unwilling listener and sought a truant hat. "This is our silver anniversary year as a firm—and it marks our biggest year in advertising activity. But, in accordance with our proved theory of advertising must keep pace with growth, if there is to be continued growth, we look for some much bigger year to come."

AT THE APOLLO.

A Great Mystery Act.

A teakettle that talks. One cannot conceive such a thing. It sounds like a Greek myth, but there is a teakettle at the Apollo this week which is made to talk. And it takes a Greek to do it, too.

Prof. Avdallas, the famous Greek musician, presents an act of mystery that is both puzzling and wonderful. The professor is robed in a long gown which makes him look like the ancient mystic. He passes through the audience and any question which may be asked of him will be answered at once by the teakettle on the stage.

It looks like a common teakettle in which the housewife boils water, but of course, it is a fine one, and especially hot water, might have a bad effect upon this kettle.

Prof. Avdallas comes to Janesville from the big Orpheum time of the east and it is safe to say, he will be the biggest sensation of the season. In addition to Prof. Avdallas there will be three other good vaudeville acts at the Apollo this week.

Mr. Frank Tucker, who is Italian singer and instrumentalist. The Allerton Girls, and Carl & Rheil.

AT MYERS THEATRE.

Sheehan Opera Company With an All Star Cast.

The roster of the Sheehan Opera Company, which comes to the Myers Sunday evening, May 30th, is an impressive one. Among its members are the foremost stars on the operatic stage today, including such artists as Joseph P. Sheehan, the greatest of all American tenors; Miss Mirth Carmen, said by critics to be a second Geraldine Farrar; Miss Mercedes Dalmada, the noted contralto; Arthur Deane, one of the foremost baritones on the operatic stage; Ruth Marshall Dye, a young American artist whose phenomenal success is due to her beautiful voice and splendid personality; John Hancock, whose beautiful basso has been heard in many leading operatic productions in this country, and others of like caliber.

The orchestra will be under the leadership of Mr. Basil Horstall, eminent director and composer. So much for the artists. Now consider for a moment that Cleopatra is today the reigning operatic sensation and that Cavalleria Rusticana is acknowledged, in fact won the prize, as the world's greatest one act opera, from a standpoint of music it stands supreme and from a dramatic standpoint it is doubtful if any of the big dramas of the day equal it in heart interest or gripping climax.

With such artists in such a vehicle it is little wonder that the tour of the Sheehan Opera Company this season is the talk of the country. If you love beautiful music, fine acting, if you have red blood in your veins, don't miss this wonderful performance, nothing to equal it has been done for years.

Indian. It has been no uncommon thing for him to squat among the braves of the Indians of the plains and in the sign language talk over matters which concerned their welfare with as much ease and understanding as if he had been brought up among them.

In Charge Of Geronimo.

Few men have seen more of Indian life. As a young officer he fought the Sioux and Cheyennes, but the fights soon gave way to councils and many times the Indians left the war path and went quietly back to work after one of these meetings. One of his greatest achievements was the reorganization of a tribe of Apaches, among whom was the savage Geronimo. These warriors General Scott turned into farmers, and peaceful American farmers, who after a time preferred to play baseball to going on the war path and killing the pale face. His experience has been with many tribes such as the Kiowas, Nez Percés, Navajos, Comanches, Apaches and the Hopis, and recently with the Plutes when he brought the four men of this tribe who were wanted by the United States Government to Salt Lake City a few weeks ago. They were not handcuffed or shackled in any way, and came voluntarily after General Scott had convinced them that they would be treated fairly and that he was their friend. This seems to be the keynote of the situation, for in General Scott's own language, "The man who would deal with the Indians is the man who proves truly their friend; the man who will not had better keep away from them."

Even the most patriotic citizen must acknowledge that the Indian has and always received his just deserts and their rights in many instances have been ignored, and it is surprising that more uprisings do not take place.

In Cuba And The Philippines.

When General Wood became the Governor of Cuba he made General Scott, who was at that time a captain, his Chief of Staff. Here again the peacemaker's personal influence was felt for the Cubans, like the Indians, trusted him. There was plenty of work to be done on the island and the bulk of it fell upon the shoulders of the Chief of Staff who had charge of the military part of the Island government.

A little later General Wood moved his officers to the Philippines and a short time afterwards General Scott was made Civil Governor of the Sulu archipelago. He remained at this post from 1903 to 1906. It was during his administration there that his methods of reposing confidence proved a failure for in one instance he was wounded by a treacherous Moro whom he had trusted. According to the records, this man, named Hassen, had been brought to camp to be interrogated by General Wood and his Chief of Staff, and after promising to be good and obey the law the man asked that an escort be sent with him to a nearby jungle where his family was hidden. Against the advice of General Wood, General Scott and half a dozen infantrymen followed the man and just after they had forded a stream the man with a low growl slid into the underbrush and a shot rang out. General Scott who was holding his revolver in both hands received the shot and his hands were so badly mangled that when aid came he was weak from the loss of blood. They had been led into ambush. General Scott then determined that the Moros must be taught a lesson and although his hands were useless and bound up in slings he determined to run down this man. For three months they searched, General Scott riding a pony which was led by a soldier. At last they found the traitor and killed him. The Chief of Staff will carry the marks of this one mistake for the rest of his life.

While General Scott was at Jolo he abolished slavery and cleaned out the slave trade in the Sulu archipelago. In 1906 he came to West Point. The Military Academy was at that time in the process of construction and General Scott, then ranking as colonel, laid the cornerstone of the beautiful Gothic chapel which overlooked the Hudson, and dominates the group of artistic buildings which constitute the new West Point.

At the end of his term there he was again sent to the Southwest, where he once more settled an Indian disturbance. Later he was given command of the brigade sent to patrol the Mexican border.

At Fort Bliss. After the battle of Ojinaga several thousand Mexican soldiers and refugees came over the border and were sent to Fort Bliss to be interned. General Scott suddenly found himself in charge of a lot of alien people who were almost helpless as well as penniless. He met this problem in his usual way—without the least bluster, and pretty soon a model camp arose on the Texas plains.

Splendid Type Of American. When General Wotherspoon became Chief of Staff General Scott was brought to Washington to become the Assistant and in this capacity his knowledge of Mexican affairs has proved invaluable to both the Administration and to the War Department. In November of last year, on the retirement of General Wotherspoon, he became the Chief of Staff. His last act of peacemaking prior to his bringing in the Flute Indians was to visit Naco, Arizona, and persuade the Mexicans to cease firing across the border. In this he succeeded and since that time there has been no more trouble on that score except that recently reported from Brownsville, which seems to be purely accidental.

General Scott is now within three years of retirement. He has served his country well, and when that retirement comes he will probably finish his book on the sign language, for he is not a man who will give up his work especially where the Indian is concerned. Always serious in his work, calm in manner, honest and upright in his decisions, and possessing a personality which inspires confidence, General Scott is best described by paraphrasing the words of the immortal Shakespeare: His life is gentle, and the elements So mixed in him, that Nature might stand up And say to all the world—This is a man.

G. A. R. MEET TONIGHT TO FINISH PROGRAM

Expect to Have All Arrangements Completed This Evening for Memorial Day Exercises.

Members of W. H. Sargent Post No. 20, Grand Army of the Republic, will hold a special meeting this evening at East Side I. O. O. F. hall to complete the final arrangements for their observance of Memorial Day on Monday.

A few finishing touches are needed to the program and it was expected today by members having this in charge that this would be completed tonight and be ready for publication tomorrow.

Together with the G. A. R., the Woman's Relief Corps, the Spanish War Veterans and their Ladies' Auxiliary are to engage in the activities of the day. Pupils of the Janesville public schools are also going to participate several hundred strong, under the leadership of Miss Emily Sewell, city musical instructor.

Tentative arrangements at noon today were for all who were going to engage in the celebration to meet Monday morning at eight o'clock, at the East Side I. O. O. F. hall. At 8:30 the W. R. C. will take carryalls to the cemetery, while others will make the trip on the street cars, accompanied by the drum corps. At the cemetery the soldier dead will be paid a fitting tribute in the salutes fired by the Spanish Veterans' squad and their final earthly resting place fittingly decorated with flowers and greens.

All organizations will meet at 2:00 o'clock at the hall for the second time and march to the Myers theatre in a body. Here public exercises have been arranged. The program will open at 2:30 o'clock. The Rev. Charles E. Ewing will say the invocation. A. E. Matheson will deliver the address of the day. The school children will furnish music at this time under Miss Sewell's direction.

Art Unadorned.
I like my art unadorned; thought and skill and the other strange quality that is added thereto to make things beautiful—and nothing more. A farthing's worth of paint and paper, and behold! a thing of beauty!—as they do in Japan. And if it should fall into the fire—well, it has gone like yesterday's sunset, and tomorrow there will be another.—H. G. Wells.

YANKEES AND SOX THE SURPRISES OF AMERICAN CIRCUIT

Wild Bill Donovan Draws Big Bulk of Credit For Developing Yanks. Sox Have the Pitchers.

New York, May 27.—Not in the history of baseball has the grand old game not seen a series of jolts as it did on the gateway this year. Surprise piled on top of surprise and the experts and statisticians who settled the races during the winter months shuddered and went as they saw teams they had picked for one-two-three so humming along in the rear, winning about one game a week. Probably the one biggest jolt handed the "dope" was the way the rejuvenated Yankees, under Wild Bill Donovan, fox-trotted out in front of Ban Johnson's loop. A mere flash in the pan, said many. But that as it may, they must admit now that it is "some flash." The Yankees are still tearing along at the pace of a midable clip. They lose lots of games, of course. But they are still winning more than they are losing and that will keep them up there in the front row.

Donovan necessarily draws the bulk of the credit for the improved form of the Yankees. "Wild Bill" has infused his cohorts with the fighting spirit and he has been along whenever they show signs of weakening. But there are some other factors that enter into the good showing of this year. High and Pipp, the two ex-tigers lassoed by the new Yankee management, have been playing a bang-up article of the national pastime all spring. Pipp has been hitting right around a 100 clip and holding almost faultlessly. Pipp grabbed the first base job away from young Andy Mullen after the hardest kind of a battle. Since, however, he has shown that he is entitled to the job by walling the ball in terrific style.

"Lute" Boone at second and Fritz Muesel at third have played championship ball all the way. This pair will come close to crowding any two at similar positions in the league for the honors. Muesel is smashing records in the last running department. This youngster boasted before the season opened that if he batted 300 he would steal more than 100 bases this season. So far he has made good. He has batted close to 300 and he has stolen an average of one base a game. As there are 154 games on the schedule and if he maintains anything near his present clip, he'll chalk up his 100 stolen bases and then some.

In the pitching line Donovan has been getting some nifty work. The Rays—Keating, Caldwell and Fisher—have been winning consistently. Jack Warhop has been twirling classy ball, but has lost several hard luck games. Paddy Baunman, an ex-tiger, is also turning a good brand of stuff for the Yankees crew. Comiskey's White Sox form another surprise, though not as great a one as furnished by Donovan's outfit. The Chicago bunch, long the season opened, presented a problem. No one knew exactly how to figure them. There was a big "if" in connection with them. In the first place the manager, Clarence Rowland, was an unknown quantity in the major leagues. He had come out of the bushes with a good record as a manager, but whether his stuff would win games in the big tent was a question. That he is meeting good evidence by the standing of the White Sox athletes in the percentage column.

High Jennings has his Tiger back in the running after several years back with the traders, the wild manager set about putting it together again with young blood. Of course, he has some of the old stuff left to work with. Cobb and Crawford, for instance, bump the ball with the regularity that they did in the days of old. But Jennings has added some valuable young blood to the club and again has a contender in the field. Up Boston way the fans are pulling for the Red Sox twirling staff to come into shape. That's about all Carlgren needs to lead the club in the going. So far this season the Boston bunch has been going poorly. "Smoker Joe" Wood is just getting right after it. Egan, Veau Greck is still out of it and the others haven't flashed the brand of twirling they are capable of delivering.

Shano Collins had not posed an PERFECT PEG BY COLLINS GIVES SOX EIGHT STRAIGHT

Chicago, May 27.—It required some tremendous baseball for the White Sox to win their eighth straight victory yesterday, but they turned the trick, beating the Yankees 7 to 6. If Shano Collins had not posed an arm to deliver a perfect peg from right field to catch Muesel at the plate, when the Yank star was legging it home from second in the last play of the game, the result might have been different. The Sox went into the ninth with a lead of two runs and the Yanks made a strong bid to tie up the count. Pipp poled a single and Collins' throw saved the game for the pale horse. It was an uphill fight for the Sox, for they came from behind and won by fighting every inch of the route. Red Faber started hurling and all expected him to win his eighth straight game, but when the game was won Red was safely on the bench, Rowland yanking him in the sixth. Cicotte went in for an inning and then Scott took the job. For the Yanks Ray Keating did the slugging and but for a couple of breaks and the swatting of Felsch, he would have stopped the Sox.

Cubs Lose Lead. Philadelphians May 27.—The weather man prevented the Cubs from retaking first place yesterday, when they were idle because of drenched diamond. Zabel will pitch against the Phillies. The Cubs leave tonight for a four game series with Cincinnati.

JUNIORS WILL TAKE HIKE ON SATURDAY

Y. M. C. A. Youngsters Plan Trip By Foot to Poor Farm, Taking Own Dinner—Forty to Make Up Trampers.

Physical Director C. E. Leak, at the Y. M. C. A., has arranged for the Juniors' first hike for this spring, to take place Saturday, when forty enthusiastic youngsters from the A. class and sub-Junior division will tramp the county poor farm, leaving the Y. M. C. A. building promptly at nine in the morning and returning to the building at about three in the afternoon. The boys do not think the walk is too much for them, and are making great plans for the day. Each youngster will provide his own meal for dinner, and with sunshine overhead there is every indication that Leak and his Juniors will enjoy a pleasant and profitable time. Upon their return to the building they will be allowed to take baths and use the swimming tanks to rest their tired muscles.

Well Supplied. Anyway, a man never has to worry about a ventilating system for his air castles.—Los Angeles Express.

RAISES OBJECTIONS TO DAWSON DRIVING

Race Directors Declare Mother of Darling Races Should Be Considered. Stutz Team Qualifies.

Indianapolis, May 27.—"If Joe Dawson attempts to drive in this year's Indianapolis 500-mile race, I shall use every influence in my power to bar him from the track," says A. C. Newby, a director of the Indianapolis motor speedway, on which the big race will be held. "Were Joe alone to be taken into consideration, I might have no objections, but such is not the case. Everyone knows the agonies Joe's mother endures every time he starts a contest, and I believe that after the ordeal she was forced to pass through last year, when her boy hovered between life and death for weeks, she is entitled to a rest."

All the years that I was in the racing game, I never permitted a man who was financially interested to ride a man to drive for me. I figured no man had a right to gamble with the happiness of one as dear to him as his wife. In Dawson's case, I believe mothers should be included in the list through, of course, ordinarily, every man must be left to settle such matters for himself."

Newby's statement, coming from a man who is financially interested in the racing game, is epoch making. It foreshadows the time when commercialism will be a secondary feature in every sport, as long as that sport is strong enough to be self-supporting.

Stutz Team Strong.

Through its great work in the elimination trials for the Indianapolis 500-mile race, Saturday, May 29, the Stutz team ranks as American favorite for that contest, with DePalma, Resta, and Porporato as its opponents at the wheel of foreign cars.

Wilcox, Cooper and Anderson, the Stutz drivers, topped the course with averages of 98.9, 94.5, and 96.4 miles an hour, respectively. Wilcox's mark was the best of the present season, 1:31 flat, but slightly behind Buell's sensational time of 1:30.13, last year.

What makes the Stutz outfit look all the better is that it is a three-car team. Precedent shows that an individual car entry is at a great disadvantage against numerically stronger competition. The individual entrant can take no chances, while the other fellow can.

Drivers Organize.

Members of the new Auto Drivers' Protective Association, an organization of racing pilots founded in Indianapolis a few days ago for the purpose of sharing control of the sport with the owners of speedways and the American Automobile Association, have been invited to a conference by Carl G. Fisher, president of the Indianapolis motor speedway, at a very early date.

Fisher says he has several things he would like to say to the racing men, with the idea of inducing them to avoid any program which, in his opinion, would be detrimental to the best interests of the game. He thus believes it would be very unwise for the new association to attempt to dictate to track owners in financial matters, such as the payment of entry fees, bonuses and the division of receipts resulting from elimination trials prior to a race.

Racing drivers, says Fisher, are already the most favored of any class of sport professionals. Unless they compete for are larger than in any other line of sport. With speedways being built all over the country, their chance for financial emolument is unparalleled. For this reason, says Fisher, drivers should be careful not to handicap the development of the game, but strictly mind their own business.

MORRIS MILLER

Left-handers are finding the going unusually heavy in the American league this season. Capable pitchers like Lelchell, Leonard, Boebing, Collins, Covelesse and a half dozen of others have not been showing them by the batters as they did in 1914. It's the right-handers who have the call among the leaders. Morton, Fisher, Dasso, Faber, Caldwell and Benz are crowding the statistics.

Oh, and alack, the fickle multitude! In Philadelphia these days the mob is all for the National league team, and the Athletics are much derided. Connie Mack, now that his team is down is called a tightwad and accused of "commercialism" because he hasn't filled the shoes of Collins, Baker, Plank and Bender—and yet the same fans who are now emitting their peevish yelp never stop to consider that it was the lightness of their patronage, their failure to bring the shekels to the gate, that made the late Athletics team a financial loser, and forced Mack to chop down the big parrot to get anywhere near his 1915 expenses.

Truly fortunate is the Philadelphia club in the versatility of its players, most of them having considerable skill in filling the various roles outside their own positions. Byrne can play second, third and short with almost equal skill. Whitted can cover any of seven positions splendidly—can fill any role outside the battery work. Niehoff can play second, third or short. Pasternak can come from the outfield and take care of first base or stop. Killifer can play a very fair first as well as catch. Ducey is all right at any of the in or outfield places. Both Becker and Cravath, in a pinch, can play first and Becker is a very tolerable pitcher. Stock can cover short or second as well as third. It's pretty hard to upset permanently a team that is thus equipped with men who can step into any gap and look out for so many positions.

PITCHING AT A KNOT HOLE ALL WINTER FAILS TO CURE WYCKOFF OF WILDNESS

Chaney, Mat Brock and a couple of lesser lights last winter, is now a full-fledged fight manager, handling Young Pat Moore, the Memphis bantam. Under Harang's tutelage, the Memphis lad began to improve, until now they are calling him the classiest little fellow in the south.

Moore's latest victory was over Johnny Erie, the St. Paul speed kid, and Moore beat the St. Paul boy in every round of an eight-session affair, with Harang in his corner.

The Phillies, leading the National league, have only one .300 hitter, Fred Luderus, and he's not only hitting in the charm circle, but is topping all the centers in the National circuit. Luderus has a mark of .336, while Clarke of the Redlegs is second with .370.

"Wanted, at once, several dozen star football players. Apply Coach Cavanaugh, Dartmouth university. That's the kind of advertisement the Hanover institution is thinking of inserting in the papers. Graduations will wreck the 1914 Dartmouth eleven and will also take a large number of the best substitutes. The Freshman team of 1914 didn't develop any real players; there are only a few players of any worth in the sophomore team of last season and, all in all, things don't look a bit rosy for Dartmouth in 1915."

There is another woman in baseball. Mrs. E. K. Bradley, wife of the famous horseman, is furnishing the backing for the Lexington team of the Ohio State league and in honor of her liberality the players' uniforms will be green and white, the colors of the Bradley racing stable. Mrs. Bradley is an enthusiastic fan and has a box at the Lexington ball park, where she entertains daily a party of women friends and roots for "her" team.

Tennis is now second only to baseball as our representative national pastime. The sport that but a few years ago was facetiously characterized as being "an old maid's game" is now being played by hundreds and thousands all over the country. No game in the United States, with the possible exception of golf, has developed so quickly and gained such widespread popularity.

"It's a long way to Tipperary," but you can reach it with a wand ad.

J. Weldon Wyckoff.

All last winter J. Weldon Wyckoff, one of Connie Mack's young hurlers, spent his spare time hurling baseballs at a knot hole in his father's barn. When he reported to Connie this spring he announced that this stunt had cured him of his wildness. But he was mistaken. Wyckoff now leads all the hurlers in Ban Johnson's circuit in his generosity toward the batters, having issued about fifty passes to first.

PERSONAL recommendation counts a lot—and the right kind of men are glad of every chance to do their fellow men a favor.

You see it illustrated every day—users of the Real Tobacco Chew telling friends the glad tidings about the small chew that satisfies.

A little chew of pure, rich, mellow tobacco—seasoned and sweetened just enough—cuts out so much of the grinding and spitting.

THE REAL TOBACCO CHEW IS NOW CUT TWO WAYS!! W-B CUT IS LONG SHRED, RIGHT-CUT IS SHORT SHRED.

Take less than one-quarter the old size chew. It will be more satisfying than a mouthful of ordinary tobacco. Just take a nibble of it until you find the evenly cut real tobacco taste comes, how it satisfies, how much less you have to spit, how few chews you take to be tobacco satisfied. That's why it is The Real Tobacco Chew. That's why it costs less in the end. The taste of pure, rich tobacco does not need to be covered up. An excess of licorice and sweetening makes you spit too much.

"Notice how the salt brings out the rich tobacco taste."

EVANSVILLE

MRS. MYGATT DIED AT EVANSVILLE LAST NIGHT

Mrs. Cecelia Mygatt, aged 85, passed away last evening at 10:40 at her home in Evansville, following a recent stroke of paralysis. Her maiden name was Cecelia Garrett. She was born in New York state. In 1880, her late husband, Lansing Mygatt, went east from Evansville and married her. The couple came to Evansville, where they resided together until he died in 1893. Mr. Mygatt was at one time a heavy investor in the Baker Mfg. Co. At her death Mrs. Mygatt was a heavy stockholder. She leaves no children, one brother, Elmer Garrett, surviving her in New York state. The remains will be taken to Coxsack, New York, Friday morning for interment, funeral to be held here at 7:45 tomorrow morning to make train connections.

The funeral for June, two year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Miller of Evansville, was held this morning at the home, Father McDermott of the Catholic church officiating. The infant died Tuesday night, after an illness. Besides her parents the deceased leaves one sister, Beth.

TAKE CHANGE OF VENUE FROM MUNICIPAL COURT IN JOHN HUBBEL CASE

Claiming prejudice of H. L. Maxwell, judge of the municipal court, Attorney E. D. McGowan this morning filed an affidavit in the case of the State vs. John Hubbell. The change of venue was granted and the case will be tried at the October term of the Circuit court for Rock county. Hubbell was charged by C. D. McCarty with wilfully and maliciously obstructing a ditch on the River road. A plea of not guilty was entered in the case a month ago.

Get Rid of "Spring Fever."
A lazy liver and sluggish bowels will overcome any ambitious and energetic man or woman and make them feel all tired out, dull, stupid and lifeless. Foley Cathartic Tablets relieve constipation, restore healthy bowel action and lighten up your liver. They are wholesome and thoroughly cleansing; do not gripe or nauseate. They banish that full, close, heavy feeling. J. L. Knight, Fort Worth, Texas, says, "My disagreeable symptoms were entirely removed by the thorough cleansing they gave my system." W. T. Sherer.

QUITE USEFUL ON SILK HAT

Electric Iron Does Away With Necessity of Using Coat Sleeve or Pocket Handkerchief.

As Ed. Howe would say, what has become of the old-fashioned man who used to polish his silk hat on his coat sleeve or with a silk handkerchief? He may not be altogether extinct, but the Simplex French hat iron is surely working a revolution in the methods of keeping a "stovepipe" in order, says the Popular Electricity. The iron is nickel plated and has a wooden handle.

and of course is electrically heated. The shape of the iron is suitable for reaching every part of the hat brim as well as the crown.

RECORD KEPT BY TELEPHONE

Phonograph so Arranged That Conversation Over Wire May Be Reproduced When Desired.

A reproach which has often been raised against the telephone is that it leaves no trace whatever of the conversation transmitted. Thus, a telephone conversation can never figure in a law suit. It is not surprising, therefore, that for some time past efforts have been made to devise an apparatus by means of which a permanent record can be kept of the words spoken over the telephone, and the phonograph has often been thought of in this connection. According to a note reproduced in La Nature from L'Electricista, Prof. P. Perrotti has just scored a success in this direction. The telephone receiver is composed of two loud speaking telephones; one of these is furnished with the usual mouthpiece; the other is connected with the vibrating membrane of a Pathe phonograph. The current required for this telephone is a little greater than for ordinary installations. The phonograph record can be made to reproduce the speech in the usual manner.

ELECTRICAL NOTES

Wireless weather reports are sent daily from Gibraltar to London. A fifty-mile telephone cable will soon connect England and Belgium. The telephone is now used for railroad purposes on 37,000 miles of line. The average life of telephone poles is 12 years, and 2,650,000 renewals must take place annually. An electric fly trap, which two Denver men have invented, requires a 450 volt current to operate it. At Amarillo, Tex., the public is supplied with water pumped by electric motors from 18 wells which are each 300 feet deep. A new alarm indicator for firemen switches on an incandescent light at a point on a map corresponding with the place from which the alarm is set. German railroads are experimenting with an electric locomotive headlight, swivelled so that an engineer can throw the rays wherever he wants them. It requires 190 years to grow a 30-foot cedar pole for telegraph purposes, but there are other poles which answer all purposes which are grown more quickly. By the erection of a chain of stations for a distance of 1,860 miles up the Congo river it will be possible to send wireless messages all the way across Africa.

IS MORTON OF CLEVELAND SECOND WALTER JOHNSON IN THE MAKING?

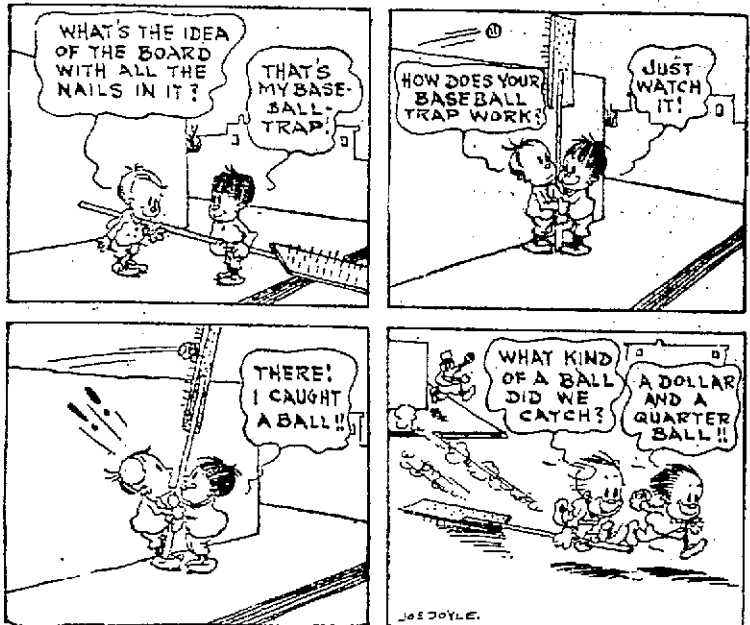

It was back in 1907 that Walter Johnson came to the Washington Nationals unheralded and unsung. He was a "rube pitcher." It was only a few years later that Guy Morton reported to the Cleveland American league club, midseason of 1914, to be exact, no more known than this same Johnson at the time he broke in. Johnson became known as "The King of Pitchers." Are his laurels to be snatched away by the younger man?

Having won almost every game he has pitched this year, Morton appears to have just as much smoke as Walter Johnson in his speediest days.
